Professor Angel Ramos-Macias
IFOS General Secretary

Dear Prof. Ramos-Macia

London's bid to host the 24th World Congress of Oto-Rhino-Laryngology (IFOS)

As the CEO of London & Partners, the growth agency for London, it is my pleasure to add my support to the bid to host IFOS 2030.

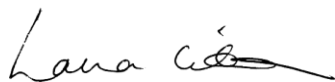

London stands out as a global centre for life sciences and healthcare innovation, recently highlighted during London Life Sciences Week. The city is home to more specialist hospitals than anywhere else in Europe and boasts several world-leading universities. This unique concentration of expertise makes London a powerhouse in Oto-Rhino-Laryngology.

Our ENT capabilities span advanced audiology, cochlear implant programmes, head and neck oncology, facial plastic surgery, and paediatric ENT care. Institutions such as the UCL Ear Institute, and Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust, exemplify this strength.

Alongside our expertise in this sector, London is also one of the best-connected cities in the world, with over 172,000 bedrooms catering to all needs and budgets. Delegates will also be able to enjoy world-class cultural experiences, including free museums, galleries, and entertainment venues. London has a proven track record of hosting high-profile international medical conferences and business events. Should the city be selected, my team at the Convention Bureau will work tirelessly to ensure the 24th World Congress of Oto-Rhino-Laryngology IFOS is a resounding success.

I firmly believe London's combination of clinical excellence, academic leadership, and event capability makes it the perfect host for IFOS 2030. I am proud to support this bid and look forward to welcoming the global ENT community to our capital.

Yours sincerely,

Laura Citron
